WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

Dry and breezy over the higher terrain late today

Today, the focus shifts from convection to wind potential as the passing front grazes the northern portion of the region. Borderline critical fire weather conditions are expected across the Northwestern Mountains and Northeastern California as the southern tip of the cold front passes in the afternoon. A wind shift from SW to NW is expected along with breezy conditions with winds in the mid-late afternoon, generally in the 15-20 mph range with gusts to around 30 mph. Afternoon humidities will be in the upper teens to mid 20% range. Tomorrow appears to be another hot and dry day with valley temperatures rising above 100 degrees again with very low humidities expected in the afternoon. Wind flow will be generally light and out of the South.

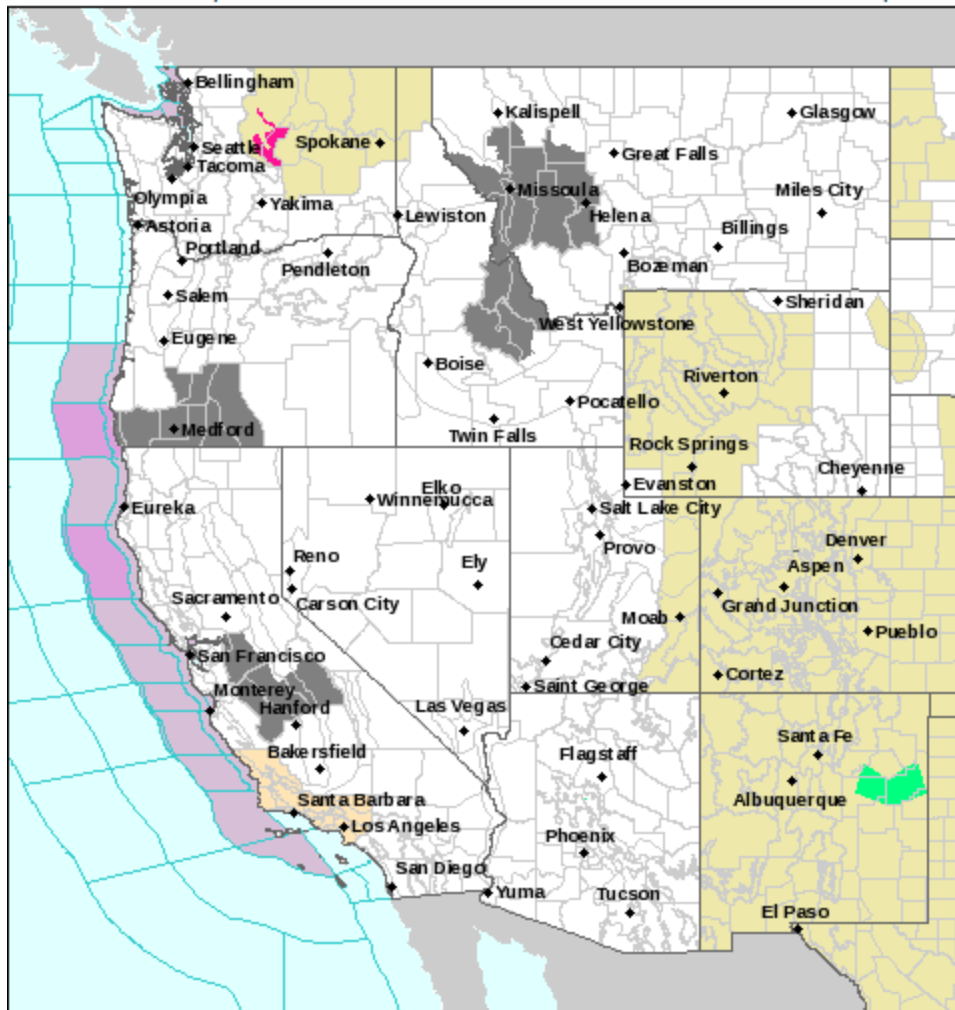

Looking beyond tomorrow, the main story will be the heat and low humidity as the thermal ridge rebuilds over the western Great Basin and California. Temperatures will be well above normal. Overnight relative humidity recoveries will be overall poor. Expect strong thermal belting at night. Winds will be generally diurnally driven except along the coast where a weak on shore flow is expected. There will be a slight chance for isolated storms in the Sierras on Tuesday.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

Hot and Dry Weather Sunday through Wednesday

The trough will weaken and will move east today which will help to decrease the thunderstorm activity. It will also be drier with humidity levels lowering into the 15-30% range over most of the inland areas. Northerly winds of 15-25 mph will surface across the Santa Ynez Mountains Late this afternoon into early tomorrow morning. Night and morning low clouds and fog will be widespread across the coastal areas again with decreasing coverage. By the weekend and into early next week, high pressure will strengthen over the Western U.S. resulting in a significant warming trend. Daytime highs will exceed the century mark across the inland valleys starting Sunday. Even areas along the immediate coast south of Point Conception may see highs about 10 degrees above normal as weak offshore flow develops. Humidity values will drop into the single digits and teens away from the coast, and the marine layer will decrease with little if any stratus coverage during the night and morning hours. A few isolated thunderstorms may return to the mountain and desert areas by early next week, but most areas will be rain free. This next heat wave looks to last for much of next week.
